World Agricultural Supply and Demand Estimates

The global wheat outlook for 2021/22 is for reduced supplies, lower consumption, nearly unchanged trade, and smaller ending stocks. Supplies are projected falling by 8.6 million tons to 1,064.2 million, primarily on the combination of reduced beginning stocks for Iran and reduced production for Canada, Iran, and the United States.

MARKET MONITOR-NOVEMBER 2021

Soaring fertilizer prices, in part driven by a strong run-up in natural-gas prices, are poised to add more uncertainty to global food markets well into the 2022/23 season. With international prices of most food crops (with the exception of rice) already at multi-year highs and their exportable supplies barely adequate to meet demand, any weather or input induced shortfall in 2022
