World Agricultural Supply and Demand Estimates

The global wheat outlook for 2021/22 is for reduced supplies, lower consumption, nearly unchanged trade, and smaller ending stocks. Supplies are projected falling by 8.6 million tons to 1,064.2 million, primarily on the combination of reduced beginning stocks for Iran and reduced production for Canada, Iran, and the United States.

Russian wheat rises with strong demand

Russian wheat prices gained for the 5th consecutive week last week amid strong demand from importers, analysts said on Monday. Russia sold about 250,000 tonnes of wheat to Algeria last week. This market is traditionally dominated by France, and Russia, the world's largest wheat exporter, has been lobbying for access to it for years.

Ukraine not considering wheat export restrictions for now - Kachka

The government of Ukraine is not considering restrictions of wheat export now. However, they may address this issue later this season, if the export pace remains too fast, declared Taras Kachka, deputy minister for agriculture, Reuters informed. Ukraine traditionally exports bulk of its wheat in the first half of the season before the export pace slows down sharply, when importers turn to other origins.

Weekly Price Report November 19, 2021

Stratégie Grains lowered its forecast for European Union (EU) exports of common wheat (non-durum) by 1.6 MMT, to 30.4 MMT due to high prices for the EU origin grain. They also raised EU ending stocks to 12.0 MMT. Prices for European wheat hit a fresh 14-year high Thursday due to strong international demand and concern over global exportable supplies. Overall, EU wheat exports are 30% ahead of last year's pace. Some analysts say that pace is

Global food trade has accelerated and is poised to hit an all-time record in both volume and value terms, according to a new report released today by the Food and Agriculture Organization of the United Nations (FAO). While global food trade has shown "remarkable resilience to disruptions throughout the COVID-19 pandemic", rapidly rising prices of food commodities and energy pose significant challenges for poorer countries and consumers, who spend large

Grain Market Report by IGC

The outlook for world total grains (wheat and coarse grains) production in 2021/22 is 3m t lower m/m (month-on-month), including cuts for wheat and barley (mainly for Iran and Algeria), but an increase for maize (led by the USA). The figure for consumption is trimmed by 2m t, as downgrades for food and feed are only partly offset by an increase for industrial uses. Taking account of larger than previously estimated opening inventories, the forecast for end-2021/22 stocks is unchanged m/m, at 600m, only a small contraction y/y (year-on-year).

MARKET MONITOR-NOVEMBER 2021

Soaring fertilizer prices, in part driven by a strong run-up in natural-gas prices, are poised to add more uncertainty to global food markets well into the 2022/23 season. With international prices of most food crops (with the exception of rice) already at multi-year highs and their exportable supplies barely adequate to meet demand, any weather or input induced shortfall in 2022

Monthly News Report on Grains, October 2021

WHEAT remains lower in early trade right now, but this yo-yo action is fully expected. US. Wheat hitting near 9 year highs, KC at fresh highs not seen since 2012, Matif and BWF punching fresh all time highs. I hope yesterdays market is yet again another reminder of how delicate the wheat market is to any supply/quality issue right now- don't argue it until there is a key headline/demand
